

MULS
THE

BRIEF

CLAYTON UTZ

Allens Arthur Robinson

The Facebook
Phenomenon

BLAM

Smoking Laws

MULS - Competitions
Sports, Social and Travel

Contents

Editors Diatribe	Page 5
President's Report	Page 7
A note from the Vice President for Finance – Vice's Vice Patrick Loffel	Page 9
Poke, Tag, Comment, Post, Paralegal, Partner, Corner Office Matthew Tracey	Page 10
The Smoking Ban: The Good and Bad Amy Malaquin	Page 12
BLAM Barnaby Hartford-Davis	Page 15
Socials Report Jenna Leo	Page 16
Law Camp '08: One-Way Ticket to Paradise Sam Manea Hardman	Page 22
Law Revue2007 Alex Edwards	Page 25
The Sports Report Katie Jameson	Page 28
Newbie Mooting Andrew Martinez	Page 30
Macquarie Law Team Wins Commonwealth Moot Sebastian Hartford-Davis	Page 32
Vis Moot 2008: Macquarie's International Mooting Success Megan Valsinger-Clark	Page 33
Out of Law's Reach: A Rant on Road Rage Jeanette Thomson	Page 34
Going International Polina Oussova	Page 36
Final Thought	Page 39

It's amazing what a doodle can reveal:
imagination, interests, intelligence. In short, the things we look for in our lawyers. If that sounds like you, give us a call or visit our website.

Allens Arthur Robinson
Clear Thinking

Editors Diatribe

Editors Diatribe

Welcome to the first edition of The Brief for 2008!!!

This issue covers current interests such as the phenomenon of FACEBOOK, an article written by Matthew Tracey that sheds light on an entirely new aspect of employee recruitment.

Next, for your enjoyment, there is a commentary on how SMOKING LAWS have affected pubs and clubs since they came into force in July 2007. There is a light hearted assessment by Jeanette Thomson, of the link between road use legislation and ROAD RAGE. The first episode of a serial by Barnaby Hartford-Davis also appears in this issue, which gives a philosophical review of the COMIC BOOK 'phase'.

This issue of The Brief also covers all the MULS related events that are relevant to ALL law students at Macquarie!! There is a colourful commentary by Sam Manea Hardman relating events of THE first year event - Law Camp. Jenna Leo relives the fun of the Start of Semester Party and Law Cruise. Katie Jameson gives us the low down on the Sports Report and Polina Oussova describes her incredible trip to the University of Vienna to take part in an exchange program focusing on international law.

The competitions held by MULS are also hotting up this year with one of the best turnouts ever!! This issue covers the angst of a first year mooting newbie - Andrew Matinez. Sebastian Hartford-Davis covers the VICTORY of the Commonwealth Mooting Team, and Megan Valsinger-Clark recounts the VIS moot.

Have a laugh over the photos from the social events, and don't forget to checkout which firms have contributed to Macquarie Law this year.

Hope you have all had a wonderful semester!!

Enjoy.

Amy Malaquin
(Brief Editor)

Edition 1
Volume 14
Semester 1 2008
Executive Editor: Amy Malaquin
Macquarie University Law Society

Contributors:
Samuel Hardman, Jeanette Thomson, Patrick Loffel, Matthew Tracey, Andrew Martinez, Katie Jameson, Barnaby Hartford-Davis, Sebastian Hartford-Davis, Megan Valsinger-Clark, Jenna Leo, Polina Oussova

Design and Layout: Kevin K Kayani
www.dynamicwebtraining.com.au

CLAYTON UTZ

Clayton Utz - a sound career choice vacation clerk ► graduate ► solicitor ► senior associate ► partner

All Clerkship and Graduate applications should be made online via www.cvmail.com.au

www.claytonutz.com

Sydney • Melbourne • Brisbane • Perth • Canberra • Darwin

President's Report

Matthew Tracey

At this point it is tempting to begin with the words “the State of our Union is Strong.” Now whilst it is tempting to dwell and dance upon the looming end of my term in November, I don’t feel the need to create a last-minute legacy in the guise of George W Bush. Nevertheless, as the first of two Briefs’ for the year, I feel that it is important to give a general address to what we have done; whether it impacted you or not. MULS is a funny creature, a spawn of all things academic, social, vocational and equitably based. However, the temptation is to focus upon those grand, shiny, law ball-esque events whilst our lesser known functions continue plodding away, unnoticed.

In First Semester we have:

- Produced the largest support from the legal profession in MULS’ history;
- Hosted the largest attendance at all social events to date;
- Created the most comprehensive online careers resource for paralegal and graduate jobs out of any law society in Australia, and
- Ran the first ever online textbook market.

In Second Semester we will:

- Launch the first ever MULS Paralegal Guide and the MULS Electives Guide;
- Publish regular (starting Week 1) media releases on the state of the Division of Law, and the wider University;
- Host ‘the Great Debate’ at Commemorative Dinner 2008, and
- Launch a free and anonymous textbook program for disadvantaged students.

These initiatives are in addition to our regular functions enshrined in the MULS Constitution. I think it’s fair to say that MULS has come a long way over the last couple of years. I am indebted to 2007 President, Sebastian Hartford-Davis, for surging forward on a number of key areas with torrential force to make MULS more relevant for all law students. Some of you may taste something bitter when thinking of MULS. Do I blame you? Hardly. It is clear that the older years of our Law School are somewhat entrenched with the pathetic power-plays are resume building that was impregnated throughout MULS in its recent history. This bitter taste served as the motivation for me to run in 2005.

Do not think for a moment that we are where we need to be. By Law Ball 2008, the results of the election will be public and next years President will be known. Whoever that may be, I can only hope she or he stands at the end due to fierce competition, deep scrutiny and a relentless drive to fulfill the role as it stands in our forty year old Constitution. I hope that my successor takes the hard work that has been done over the last couple of years and builds upon it. Anything else is a waste. For those who think MULS is too political. I ask you to wake up to yourselves and realise that MULS is a political entity with a public role. Anything less and we would be falling short of our duty. If you like what we do, then why not become an Executive Member and do it yourself? If you don’t like what we do, then why not do the same? Either way, the chance to shape and respond to public opinion should not be denied to either fans or pundits.

Team-work helps you succeed in life! - MULS

Dear charming readers,

After 3 years (dear god) on MULS, I'll be saying farewell at the end of the year. While this obviously has the benefit of meaning that my friends won't have to put up with my constant harassment during election time any more, it does make me wonder what the future holds for this dear little organisation.

MULS does a lot of great things for law students, but it's important that those who stick around remember that the focus of their actions has to be on student benefit. We're at our best when we're doing things that students actually enjoy and derive a clear benefit from. Everybody likes to party, needs a job, and could do with someone to take their fight to the academics from time to time. As long as the focus remains on helping law students to get the most out of their time at Macquarie, we're doing alright.

Unfortunately though, people sometimes get a bit side-tracked on their way to achieving that. Whether it's because of personal ambitions or power struggles, people can have a tendency to put the needs of students towards the back of the queue. A few years ago, we were in that position. The exec was focused more on getting one over on each other than on doing what we were elected to do: helping. Luckily (and due to some excellent leadership over the last 1 ½ years) we've moved on from that.

MULS elections are once again on the horizon, so to all budding exec members remember: If you run for MULS for rank and resume, it will come at the expense of a scar on your soul. MULS is about student service, not your future pay-check.

Patrick Loffel

Vice President (Finance)

Poke, Tag, Comment, Post, Paralegal, Partner,

Matthew Tracey

The sudden increase in the importance of social networking sites such as Facebook and MySpace to general communication has meant that everyone is on display, often whether they like it or not. The HR Departments of many top and mid tier firms have been clued in to this new trend, and have armed themselves with another tool for sifting through the mountains of applications they receive for paralegal, clerkship and graduate positions. What better reflection of a person's character and good nature is there than their online profile? Should most of us be worried? Probably not. Should some of us be worried? You bet.

With the widespread availability of high speed internet connections, individuals now possess the bandwidth to host their entire lives online. Coupled with the decreasing costs of technology (particularly digital cameras and laptop computers), this has brought society to a point where it is almost automatic to share your social experience with the wider world. How often have you heard after a photo is taken the words: "Tag that one!" or "Whack it on Facebook." The initial players to catch on to this phenomenon were photo hosting pages such as Bebo and Flickr. Once these photos had been amassed into a central point, a community is born and individuals are inextricably brought together and separated, based on the photos they take. The ability to "comment" on another person's photograph tied this community together and it wasn't long before the advent of MySpace and Facebook capitalised on these ties, making the individual the focus rather than the photo.

Facebook is currently the clear Australian leader in terms of popularity. Whilst MySpace still retains more members, the growth rate in Facebook has been substantially higher. Facebook has 67 million active members currently around the globe and is doubling its numbers every six months. In comparison to MySpace, which currently retains 188 million users, Facebook is a smaller entity but with exponentially larger growth potential. This status has caused Rupert Murdoch to question his purchase of MySpace in 2005 for $652 million. Most writers about this new phenomenon differentiate Facebook and MySpace by the particular people that use it. MySpace has commonly been associated with individuals who do not mind having themselves on display and want to meet new people, whereas Facebook tends to attract leaders and free thinkers who wish to utilise and enhance connections already in place.

What many students may not be aware of is that their profile is available to the careful scrutiny of two major groups of people apart from their own friends, both of which may be unwelcome. Despite the obvious intrusion of "cyber-stalkers" into one's online space, the other visitor takes the form of many of Sydney's top-tier law firms. The goal of many job interviews is to determine what kind of person you actually are. The use of psychological profiling can often intimidate potential candidates and deter them from working for such a firm. However, the profiling still takes place. You just don't know it. It is common practice for HR Departments to search for their interviewee's profiles before they sit down and talk face to face. This means that in addition to your resume (a document which is rarely stricken with truth and absolute accuracy), potential employers can gain a glimpse into your private life. Your photos, videos, friends (and their comments), other employers, musical tastes, T.V. shows, reading lists and interests.

To gain a further insight into one's persona, there is no better way than the new Facebook application, “Compare Me.” Earlier this year, Facebook opened up most of their source code to 3rd party developers upon which they could build applications and earn fees on advertising revenue. One of the most popular applications, “Compare Me” allows your friends to make judgements about you in about fifty different categories including: best body, most likely to skip class and most likely to succeed. This brings a new meaning to peer evaluation and is essentially multiple references from people who know you better than any past employer does. What does all this mean for the average student? The increased invasion of privacy that Facebook has facilitated has meant that parts of your life you previously thought separate from the workplace are now fair game for current and potential employers. However, the individual often consents to this invasion as they choose to sign up for an account with Facebook or MySpace. A better solution is perhaps to change one’s privacy settings so that your life isn’t totally on display, and all your photos and comments from friends aren’t instantly available to anyone. Or if narcissism, precludes removing yourself from the spotlight, perhaps censoring your page as to remove that photo of you scull-ing a beer from your left converse shoe at last year’s Law Cruise may be more appropriate. All this increased awareness may perhaps make you think twice before joining a group entitled “I’ve Thought About Dropping Out Of Law School At Least Ten Times Today,” as it may not demonstrate your true convictions.

Corner Office.

Does this retreat from reality take away individuality? By censoring your own profile or keeping potential employers in mind do you defy yourself by essentially presenting a prepared and edited version? Not necessarily. There may be many reasons why one would alter the aftermath of certain events and experiences. People often “untag” unflattering photos of themselves, delete wall posts that refer to unmentionable indiscretions and decide which groups to be associated with. So perhaps this is already happening. People will present a version of themselves that is representing them in the best light. Facebook has essentially become a social resume: the good parts without the bad. The only difference is that most people think only their friends are viewing their profiles and not someone who may be able to give them a career. So what is the difference?

If we’re not being true to ourselves anyway, then the fact that employers are viewing our every perfectly scripted detail means that they’re still not getting to know the real person. However, the motivations underpinning each path (social or career) differ. It may be attractive to some to have a bit of an edge on their page, whether it is a few trashy photos or some nefarious group associations. Then again, employers may see this “edge” as something of an x-factor that differentiates them from the pack. Given that the pack is probably doing this as well, however, defeats the process altogether. None of this changes what firms are looking for. Good marks, a wide experience in extra-curricular activities, legal experience, an insightful understanding of yourself and your place in the law, and general common sense will remain as the most sought after attributes of potential employees. These are hard to fake.

The increased online socialising due to these social networking sites has not been without exploitation by the commercial industry. What is alarming is that whilst people submit themselves online to potential friends and stalkers, the thought of a law firm viewing them is potentially more frightening. The risk of unwanted intrusion from the former is accepted as part of the experience of networking online.

If you have an upcoming interview, maybe its best to not have your profile picture of you rolling in the mud at Conception Day with that wholesome American exchange student.

THE SMOKING BAN: THE GOOD AND BAD

Amy Malaquin

In July 2007 smoking was finally abolished in all inside areas of pubs and clubs, much to the vexation of many seasoned chain smoking patrons. The cancer council and other members of the public have been pushing for years for this step to be taken, and the government has been caving in one concession at a time. The previous step was confining smoking to only ten percent of any venue, what a joke, anyone who has a social life that includes alcohol, knows that it was a stretch to find a place that adhered strictly to these rules!!! Not only that, but ten percent??? Seriously??? As if ‘non-smoking’ section, where only a thin wall of AIR separated them from the smokers. It was this farce that bothered me considerably, but now inside areas of pubs and clubs are totally smoke-free environments.

So how has it affected the industry, individuals and society at large? Well as a person who has worked in the same small bar for over four years, I have a unique perspective on this particular issue. Obviously generally consistent patronage, the effect has been obvious but at the same time, not as dramatic as I thought it would be.

When I first started over four years ago, I have memories of days in the small front bar, in which all the locals sat, where the air was so thick with smoke that you could see a substantial haze over the heads of the patrons, a haze that went from the ceiling to the floor. All the bartenders eyes constantly watered. I was once told by another bartender that there was a point before I got there, that the one meter law had not been implemented yet, a rule which meant that you had to be at least one meter away from the bar if you were holding a cigarette. He told me that there was a time when the patrons used to sit directly at the bar whilst smoking, centimeters away from him whilst he poured drinks all day. Most of the bartenders at this small pub do not smoke, and they were all extremely happy when July came around and suddenly the air cleared.... but so did the

“A cleaner environment to socialize and work in, which was the ultimate goal of the laws”.

the smoke didn't drench the other ninety percent, and waft over to the other patrons who sat in the

it has effected different types of places in different ways, but in terms of a small local pub with a pub. I came back into work the day after the law took effect and it was total crickets, there was not a soul in the place.

The chaos, or lack thereof, that ensued for many locations proved disastrous, many places had to shut down and most lost vast amounts of money. People speculated that this was because the majority of revenue for these places came from poker machines, and as poker machines were located inside and people couldn't smoke inside, they wouldn't sit down and gamble. In some cases however, it was just a matter of which addiction would win out. Some venues solved this problem by building outdoor poker machine areas, and whilst I understand the need to make a buck, this still struck me as little bit sad.

The place where I work has luckily managed to develop a happy medium, the patrons came back quite quickly once the pub adjusted by adding a few seats and tables in a licensed area just outside the door, and allowed them to smoke there. Surprisingly, they don't all spend all their time out there either, but rather sit inside mostly, only going outside when they want to smoke. I'm pretty sure a lot have cut down significantly and some have even quit. I'm also pretty sure that the pub is pulling approximately the same revenue that it was before the smoking ban, based on patron numbers. People were very concerned about the smoking bans effect on the industry, and whilst some places unfortunately didn't survive, those that did, are slowly clawing their way back. The truth of it is, is that people want to drink socially, and they still want to go out to the places that they like and do so, even if they are can't smoke inside anymore. People will adapt if they are forced too. So really not that much as changed; the industry has lost money but is making its way back, the smoking public have adjusted, and the non-smoking patrons and bartenders have a cleaner environment to socialize and work in, which was the ultimate goal of the laws.

GET ahead

A supportive environment makes you a better lawyer

"How will you ever know you're a flying squirrel if you don't give it a shot?"

Blake Dawson has billion dollar deals, great clients and the rest you expect from a top tier law firm. Yet we choose to operate a little differently.

Respect goes both ways. Fresh ideas are worth listening to. New graduates should occasionally enjoy daylight. Wisdom can be taught.

We choose to champion our people's career development because we believe that providing a supportive environment makes you a better lawyer. And it's good for our business.

Get on board and get ahead.

Ask us how.

Liz Henry
People Development Consultant
Graduate Programs
T 61 2 9258 5728
liz.henry@blakedawson.com

Applications open 2 July 2008
Applications close 1 August 2008

Level 35, 225 George Street, Sydney NSW 2000 Australia
T 61 2 9258 6000 F 61 2 9258 6999

Blake Dawson

WWW.BLAKEDAWSON.COM

The article starts simply.
To get to the end, you need to play your favourite song. Need is a strong word. The alternative to music is silence.

The mind pursues creative thoughts. Creativity is the bane of tension. Yet creativity is the lord of nothing.
It rules beside all in the most gloriously tangential ways.
Meanwhile, it seems to be annoying and 'impolite' to whistle.

Yet whistling is very therapeutic. Music can never leave those who can whistle. Those who cannot whistle are not necessarily poor souls. They may tap their appendages to the merry tune of their heart. Everyone must understand how frustrating stream of consciousness writing can become. It zigs and zags and never seems to get anywhere. However, the challenge is to see past the words to the thoughts behind them.

True communication does not lie in the appearance of structure of thought.

Stream of consciousness is real.

This is important.

If the world were a see-saw,

you are a fulcrum.

That was creative. But does this story end? Why did I make you play music?
Isn't it all right for the mind to work in silence? Wandering, pah! It seems unreasonable to say that the mind is tool of great distraction? Who is lord of focus, of hard word and determination? Do you not think that every person who whistles while they work must not be working hard enough? Or do you wonder that they cannot be achieving what they need to achieve? What is it they need to achieve? In fact, how can they be successful if all they do is whistle all the time? Why are there so many unanswered questions? If the world is such a beautiful place, then why can beauty be so difficult to see?
What is that old adage about pain and please? What is the old idiom about lines and reading? Is there a message behind this article?

Well, it would seem that comic books are more than a 'phase.'

To be continued.

Social functions – The Brief

Jenna Leo

2008 has been one of the biggest on the social radar in record. We have had record attendance and are loving the enthusiasm of the new first years, as well as the regulars who are always keen! If every social event could be summarized with a drink, First Year law camp 08 would definitely be Rumba, closely followed by Sex on the Beach [in honor of the many couples sneaking off to the bushes, and the random clothing found each morning along the beach]. This years Law camp was the biggest on record, and while the exec spent most of their time playing hide the spirit bottles from the first years, every ‘camper’ seemed to have an awesome time.

-----Todd Darvas, 1st Year, Taurus, Cricket Stump Sharpener-----
Rather than just provide an overview of what went down on this years first year law camp (drink, sleep, eat, play then do it all again) i thought i might just share a few of the classic moments from my own personal experience....

This one time, on Law Camp...

It was about 4 a.m. on saturday morning, and after a huge night most people had managed to make it back to their dorms (or in some cases a soft patch of grass) and were trying to catch what would prove to be some valuable hours of sleep. However for some people, this sleep was soon to be rudely interrupted. One bloke (he knows who he is) stumbled into what he thought to be his room and and made his way over to what he thought to be his bed, but, to his horror there was someone in it! He flipped his lid, ripping off the persons blanket and yelling “you cant steal my bed, i paid two hundred bucks for this!” (amongst other things). As the rest of the room sat up wondering what was happening and the lights came on, he soon realised his mistake. Given that the idea of the camp was to make some new mates, he was really getting off on the wrong foot. (Don’t worry Tommy,

us boys still love ya)

A couple of dorms down, more disgruntled first years were also being rudely awakened, this time by a new lecturer at Macquarie by the name of “professor Kayne”. After a profound rumba-induced enlightenment, prof. Kayne felt the need to give an insightful lecture to dark dorm of angry campers on the phenomenon of “Possum Sovereignty” in which he outlined the subtle yet crucial differences between “possums” and “pos-sims”. (for those who missed the lecture it can be found on i-lecture. It will be covered in the end of semester exams)

For a couple of struggling uni students, the camp meant the realisation of a long held dream... to own cutlery. As we left Broken bay a suspicious clanging of metal could be heard emanating from their bags and when we opened them curiously, we found the looted bounty. But, when you have moved away from home and you’re trying to live off a measly youth allowance, such simple things as knives and forks, which were once taken for granted, become prized possessions. However thanks to them, some poor little kid at band camp is gonna be eating his rice bubbles with a fork tomorrow.

Many earned reputations that will probably precede them for the rest of their time at mac law. Justin proved his skill as a male model, tearing up the catwalk and bringing the ladies to their knees with some very sexy though somewhat obscene moves inspired by the great Derek Zoolander. A few people displayed an almost disturbing tendency to nudity, willing to drop their dacks in front of everyone without a second of hesitation for a couple of bonus points in trivia. Some thrill seekers even tried their hands at “extreme skinny dipping” in what camp staff warned us were shark infested waters! And on the drinking front “the Baron” or “Bazza” as us boys liked to call him, proved himself to be the true heavyweight of the camp, earning a reputation as the “one gulp wonder”, pushing himself to new extremes (and somehow managing to burst a blood vessel in his eye in the process).

These were just a few moments of madness that happened on this years camp, and I’m sure there are many more epic tales out there. Good times were had by all (not including a few savage hangovers) and I’m sure everyone would agree when I say to MULS that they did an awesome job!

The next drink on the MULS social cocktail menu was SOS; the jäger-bomb. SOS is aptly named jagerbomb because just like the drink, this event managed to get everyone really drunk really quickly [Even the door girls]!

This years start of semester party was at Greenwood, on a warm Wednesday night in March and featured a $4 open bar. The first years got to experience Teenwood on a night other than Thursday and the rest of us just got to relive our newbie experiences there. Over 150 people adorned themselves in unnecessary accessories with a special mention to the boy who brought the mini fluffy dog in a sequined purse and a shout out to the person who brought the Stop sign. Door bitching just wasn’t the same after that.

Law Cruise - For anyone that managed to make it to the bar, the drink of the night would definitely have been a vodka with a splash of lemonade. We did have to wait for el Presidente to arrive before we set sail... The chillax lounge seemed to encourage extensive canoodling on the beanbags and the downstairs dance floor encouraged much of the same... in vertical form. The amount of lycra and fluoro was confronting yet strangely appealing and the creativity didn’t stop there with snaps to the guy who wore the muscle suit and to the girls in g-string leotards. The party didn’t end there, with the throng of people powering on to Cargo Lounge and Judd keeping good record of the shenanigans that ensued.

All in all law events can be summarised with the drink rocket fuel, a whole lotta alcohol and a great idea at the time and on the night, with serious regrets the next morning... depending on who you woke up next to...

To be continued... at
INTERVARSITY PARTY
2008

Golden Moments!!

Law Camp '08: "One way ticket to Paradise"

Sam Manea Hardman

The Law Camp held in term 1 was the highlight of the semester for many of us first years. Mountains of homework were flung aside as one hundred and fifty 17-23 year olds descended on the Sport and Recreational facility in Broken Bay. With $5000 of alcohol [the Facebook group "Ewwwww... Rumba" says it all], three days of sun, beach, sport, chilling, two nights of reckless abandonment, and one company's limited mobile-coverage; it was in all ways a camp much like schoolies, and a great incentive to fail first year, if only to do it again.

It began after Friday's one-hour lecture on law and morality, and as the masses fortunate enough to be able to escape Sydney for the weekend marched off to the buses, pockets of acquaintances began vying for dominance of the back-seats.

An hour or so later, the wave of fervent expectations that had been building all day came to a crescendo as the ferry we had boarded at Brooklyn docked at our final destination.

After a quick dinner, we crashed through the doorways of our cabins and began setting up home base. Comfortable beds made up for their deflating pillows, and the addition of wooden poles provided climbing challenges and dance-offs. The rooms and bathroom, initially comfortable and clean, soon were covered in sand and hair; the former from our numerous forays to the beach; the latter from Pish's self-haircut. All of that, however, was minor to the prospect of the first party of the year to be held later that night.

For the first night, everyone (including the Executives) got their freak on, boganifying themselves with trackie-dacks, flanos, boots, zinc, short-shorts, and accents that would put "The Castle" to shame; all of which was made extra special by the constant ringing of the Spice Girls over the speaker systems. And then, in the true spirit of law, we all got absolutely loose, running around, singing, yelling, getting high on company and other things of varying natures, dancing, drinking copiously, and working out that the Execs were pretty radical and not the reserved parental figures we had all assumed them to be. Some were even so nice as to bestow on me the nickname 'Franco;' a sure better one than some of the other nicknames that were being assigned to people (i.e. Mika).

Bed soon called, but little sleeping was done in many cabins. In our cabin, between the "earthquakes," Hast and Neville talking all night, Shayan and Kobina's endless supply of witty retorts, snoring, hook ups, and general eagerness to stay up, it was hard to. Many simply bailed their cabins to find peace or fun in other beds. Other's found sussing out who was in their cabins more interesting; an instance of which resulted in the birth of Bryn's nickname "SALMON!" Elsewhere, people settled on late-night skinny-dipping sessions, crashing on the beach, posing for Red Bull ads, playing endless drinking games with Rumba and an Australian vodka brand, and even taking to stalking and groping Executive President Matt Tracey. Despite an incident where Lucy suffered an animal bite (all indicators point to Tom Hambrett as the biter), it was a great night, topped off with some M&M throwing competitions and hectic pillow fights.

The next day began with sore-heads, regrets and breakfast.

People then branched off to play volley ball, footy, go swimming or jogging, or stalking turkeys and goannas. Special mentions go to Emily Aitken and her patented under-arm “birthing” version of a volley-ball serve, and Katie Jamieson for spiking it big time in volley ball, and later pegging a vortex at Mika’s head.

After a slow lunch, most of us hit the ocean – some simply in their underwear or in their Bogan attire – or took part in an Exec-dominated game of forces-and-backs. The exercise was too much for many, and most just passed out on the beach, watching jealously as Mitch “Goat”, Aimee, Steve and “Apple-chapel” Eva swam out to a passing yacht to see what civilisation had to offer steak-wise. Those intelligent enough to have brought their Course Handouts sprawled out over the shore-line, studying away. Games of thong-cricket followed by proper cricket (once someone had been bothered to get a real bat) then took over the beach. Great effort should be awarded to the token exchange student Justin, who managed to hit it for 6 several times despite not realising cricket’s batting style as being different to that of baseball’s. The out-fielders had it rough, standing in blistering sun, knee deep in warm water, sandpapering their sunburnt backs on the beach every time they dived for the ball during play.

The pockets of people had begun to disintegrate by this stage, replaced with a developing mass unity. Towards the mid-afternoon, a few of my cabin’s greatest (all having secured nicknames by now) including Hash-brown, Ev, Shaz, Akon, Sisqo, Hugh-o, and Mika, were marched away to start BBQing a million sausages, steaks, chicken pieces and fish fillets for everyone’s dinner. A fervent discussion with the camp staff about the benefits of eating a lot of pineapple, sausage fights, and the continual pouring of beer over the food were some of the highlights. Yelling out “Low,” “Soulja Boy” and “You Got to be Startin’ Something” any second and anywhere also became a new fixation of ours.

After eating, everyone scoured around for firewood, many of us already under the effects of renewed drinking. A short while later, a round of trivia was held in the hall; the top events being Justin and Prayas strutting Zoolander-style down a catwalk, during which Justin pulled Sally Cruse’s bra out of his pants; Katie and Tahnee losing their voices; and Bryn (a.k.a. Salmon) over-drinking and being sick inside and out, followed shortly by someone slipping in it. A bonfire that took over the beach had been set up by this stage. As it was set alight, a huge crowd gathered; sitting, talking, entertaining, dancing, singing, and drinking some more, while hook ups sprouted around the place like spot-fires. Special mention goes to Akon and Kris for their efforts ;).

The next day was as quick as it was almost uneventful, as everyone ate and drank left overs, nursed their heads, shook off bad memories, cleaned their cabins, swept the tonnes of sand on and under every bed away, and packed bags and goods onto the boat. And then we left.

As short as law camp was, however, all was made up for by it being potent in its ability to change our outlook on our degrees and the people in them. The last great thing from Law Camp that I personally can remember thinking (apart from Barnaby and Mahony boosting my street-credit by yelling out to the entire return-bus that ‘Hardman’ is my surname, or that Start Of Semester Party was less than three days away) was that this degree was looking better and better. What was initially a 5 yr extension to a high-school education, is now seen by many with the added expectation for wonders and good times ahead, shared with a new horde of great mates.

inspiring talent

Imagine this. The legal qualifications you've worked so hard to complete have been put to good use on an extensive range of complex matters and challenging business issues. Your clients include some of the largest and most recognisable Australian and international organisations. You've benefited from exposure to many different areas of law and you've worked alongside some of the sharpest legal minds in the country. Now imagine the breadth of career opportunities such experience gives you.

We're proud that our vacation clerks and graduates often talk about Freehills' friendly yet professional culture, challenging work, regular client contact and partner support as features that distinguish Freehills from other firms.

If you're looking for the right place to kick-start your legal career, talk to Freehills.

Inspiring people, inspiring outcomes. It all starts with your talent.

www.freehills.com

Freehills

Law Revue 2007

Alex Edwards

We emerge, naked, into the harsh light. Blinking in its brilliance, sweating under its intensity, we are terribly aware of our nudity and the inadequacy of mere cupped hands. The girl next to be trembles, I gulp nervously. Some horrific abduction nightmare? No; Law Revue. And everyone is staring at our butts. Thank God for all that time on the Stairmaster.

The nude skit (or two in 2007, just to keep things spicy) is a traditional part of the great institution that is the Macquarie Law Revue, that annual collection of live music, comedy, videos, choreographed dances and a sprinkling of bad taste. All written, directed, filmed, performed and danced by students and cajoled into a coherent shape, like Play-Doh, during months of earnest encouragement and occasional outright bullying by our increasingly frantic executive. But how did we get even this far?

Nine months in the making, the executive first got together in January 2007 to begin preparations for the September show: hunting for recruits at first year law camp, weekly writing sessions at the bar and a weekend in the Blue Mountains. In that year most of the old hands had gone on to better and brighter things in that world beyond the cossetting walls of our university, so recruitment of new victims began with vigour. Traps were laid at Orientation Week; friends bribed, inebriated, begged or threatened; and the First Year Law Camp turned into a recruiting ground by our comedic junta. All hostages were eventually returned to their families.

Meanwhile, our never-tiring industriously insectoid directors were getting at least ten writers turning up at the bar each Wednesday to generate ideas and write skits, videos and choose songs, our intellects fuelled by the nourishment of cold beer and hot sausages. By the time mid-year break rolled around, we had about twenty people and numerous skits ready to be brought together at the weekend away.

Ostensibly to produce more material for the show, the weekend away is actually a chance to get to know everyone and promote unbearable sexual tension that will haunt the Revue until the last second, of course a necessary element of any great piece of theatre. Alcohol-abuse, another fundamental element of the creative arts, was our recourse to drown out the rushing of hormones in our ears and dispel any remaining social awkwardness. Frustration was vented on bushwalks, and then rediscovered by immediately becoming lost. On the last night we made our way to the Three Sisters for a group meal at the Indian restaurant. Like we say to all first-time Revuers, getting back from said restaurant with the inevitable digestive complaints is, well, just part of the magic.

With a cast at ease with one another, and the return of semester, rehearsals started in earnest: every Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday. Hilarity ensues. I am told that I can sing. I disagree. The Musical Director tells me I can. Reluctantly, I sing. As a direct consequence, one person locks themselves in the toilet whimpering and a pregnant woman experiences an early delivery. The Musical Director now agrees with me. We are also taught dances of extreme complexity, while I and every other able bodied man feign severe injury. Nonetheless, much to my surprise, it seems that the fast and furious dance steps of "Johnny went down to Canberra" were indeed physically possible.

We threw our feeble jokes in front of our expert cameraman who edited them into a form resembling comedy. Just like how they make Rove funny.

Promotion was taken seriously, with the issue of hot-pink t-shirts, clearly requisitioned from strippers masquerading as road-safety workers. For several weeks we would live, breath, eat, and sleep in these garments. Unfortunately, the strong smell was insufficient to ward off disease, and the cast succumbed to a vicious cold introduced by some irresponsible plague-bearer that temporarily reduced rehearsals to snuffle-fests. The producers were also stringing up beautiful posters around the campus like Chinese firecrackers. Two copies of the Borat DVD were purchased to furnish ourselves with the latest in male beach fashion (the ubiquitous mankini) which was displayed proudly in first year law lectures, among other, perfectly legal, publicity stunts. Bottoms on seats? We got em.

Our opening night saw two-thirds capacity which is almost unheard of at the Lighthouse Theatre. From there, the numbers increased dramatically, with our Friday night show resulting in stage space being hastily reorganised into makeshift seating as over a hundred and twenty people turned up at the doors. Huge crowds give us great reactions, and that show ran twenty minutes overtime simply because the audience laughed so much. It should be noted that this was Friday night, and SAM Bar was oh-so-near. The other shows saw wonderful attendance from students (both from Macquarie and other universities), friends, staff, parents and locals. The clamorous (half-hearted) demands for an additional show by numerous (three-and-a-half) students were regretfully turned down.

Jokes aside, thanks to the hard work and dedication of the cast, the show was tight, a return to form for this wonderful establishment. A much appreciated budget increase from MULS allowed the technical side to match the theatrical. Costumes, additional tech gear, staging and programmes were all given a boost over previous years. The band were as fantastic as they always are, saving the show with the hit "The Projector's Not Working (We're Stalling)" when we encountered technical difficulties and kindly making sure we drank enough hooch ("it'll make you feel better!"). Dean McCloud deserves a special mention for his bravery in presenting some of the worst-taste jokes I have ever heard to an unsuspecting audience, and his three-minute stylophone solo in "Iron Man". The directors were gracious to us mere mortals, one even allowing us to watch in amusement as he, the victim of an energetic exit from the nude skit, writhed like a naked hamster in the metal cage of the Zimmer Frame prop. Most amusing.

Despite the huge number of hours involved, every one of us loved Revue. It's impossible not to. For the two months of rehearsals, the cast is somewhat akin to an extended family, with the exception that we all get on with each other (and the sexual tension, unless we're talking Texas). Walking to the café for caffeine to replenish myself after yet another afterparty, I felt a sense of extreme satisfaction with my university and camaraderie with my peers. Thanks have to go to MULS and their sponsors. Also to our musical and video directors, choreographers, costume artists, front-of-house, writers, techies and crew. And, of course, the cast.

Interested in Revue 2008? Rehearsals start at the end of July/early August, for performances in August/September. Contact maclawrevue@yahoo.com.au, or editor@mul.org if you want to be in cast, crew or band. No audition necessary, there's no requirement to be in Law, as long as you're a student at Macquarie, and we will of course temporarily suspend our elitism.

BAKER & MCKENZIE

We'll take you anywhere you want to go

Start your career with Baker & McKenzie, an instinctively global law firm, and you'll be immediately working at the forefront of the legal and business world.

Drafting ground-breaking legislation, practising cutting-edge international climate change law, negotiating global private equity deals and major privatisation projects are just some of the things we do – in Australia and around the world.

Major deals with top clients aren't all you get at Baker & McKenzie. Our culture of opportunity gives our graduate lawyers access to partners and clients early in their careers, and our professional development and global secondment programs are second to none.

And when you join Baker & McKenzie, you're not just joining one office, you're joining a firm you can be a part of wherever in the world you choose to be.

But don't just believe our ad, believe the people in it.
Hear what they have to say at www.bakernet.com/ourpeople.

For more information call Hayley Pickering in Sydney on 02 8922 5429 or Katie Culpitt in Melbourne on 03 9617 4206.

Baker & McKenzie
www.bakernet.com

Baker & McKenzie International is a Swiss Verein with member law firms around the world. In accordance with the common terminology used in professional service organizations, reference to a "partner" means a person who is a partner, or equivalent, in such a law firm. Similarly, reference to an "office" means an office of any such law firm.

FROM THE FIELD WITH Katie J

Welcome, sports fans, to MULS sport for its second overly enthusiastic year! This year MULS plans on giving all you Olympic wannabes and professional spectators plenty of opportunity to get involved both on and off the field!

Kicking off this years sporting calendar was the MULS Touch Footy Challenge on Saturday May 10th. Five teams from across the Macquarie Law fraternity turned out on a sunny autumnal morning for a days worth of sporting prowess and heavy touching. With the MULS resident DJs providing the inspirational tunes, Red Bull the performance enhancing substances and the MULS exec the BBQ sustenance, a day of athletic perfection began.

Standout teams 'Awesome Law-some' and the originally named 'The Predators' stood out from the start, with both teams progressing through preliminary rounds undefeated. An executive decision on behalf of both organisers and captains led to both teams being selected for the playoff for the ultimate title of Champion. After a nail-biting final half, 'Awesome Law-some' were eventually victorious over 'The Predators' by a single point.

Special mention goes to first year Chris Evans, sidelined early with a hamstring injury but still managing to be one of the most enthusiastic off field players around. Also to Phillippa Hinton's much appreciated emergency sports administration skills.

UP NEXT FOR MULS SPORT...

Preparation has begun for this years inaugural Law Intervarsity Sports Day. After the success of last years event, this year proves to be bigger and better than ever, with more teams, more sport and more fun - jumping castles, cheerleaders and a massive after-party! After a respectable equal second last year to UTS, MULS is looking to take on Sydney University's dominance on the field and court! Get involved by registering your interest for teams or volunteering to help out on the day via the MULS website!

Newbie Mooting

Andrew Martinez

Macquarie is one of the few universities to allow first year law students to participate in junior mooting competitions. The decision to participate during my freshman year was based more on the same scare tactics used to encourage law camp attendance: “if you don’t do it, you’ll regret it” rather than in order to take advantage of this privilege. Having ‘done it’, I’m now in a better position to evaluate MULS ominous advice and determine whether my mooting experience has in fact decreased my general levels of regret.

Mooting has certainly taught me some valuable lessons. Besides calling for my first confused trip to 4th floor of the library, mooting introduced me to the legal problem solving model and familiarised me with case law. More importantly, it also offered reassurance that if I held on, life continued after Jurisprudence. Confident at first, I wrote down new, barely understood but still very legal and impressive sounding phrases such as ‘promissory estoppel’ to use in my teams first moot.

From my perspective, the first moot was a disaster. Nothing I said resounded well: all I really got right was the supplied formal introduction. The rest is a blur of awkward silences, of ‘can I please take a moment to refer to co-council’ and ‘I’m sorry, we’re unable to answer your question at this time’. The odds were definitely stacked against us, embodied by an inquisitive judge and our competition: the ‘Charlie’s Angels’ of second year law students. I can see now how unfair their advantage was. All I had was Hart, which in addition to being hated was now also useless, an hour of flipping through a contracts book, as well as some obscure Googled case law (not recommended). However, this was ultimately a valuable experience. It taught me the importance of preparation, of Casebase and the truth of Murphy’s law, that ‘everything that can go wrong, will go wrong’, so don’t offer a summary of the facts, if those facts have momentarily escaped your mind.

Although we had never won a moot, we advantaged to the semi-finals due to the number of forfeiting opponent teams. Either our fierce reputation had spread, or the difficulty of grappling with Mill’s Harm Principle had caused some of our ‘learned friends’ to crack under the pressure. Now in the presence of the Dean of Law, we again confronted our original opponents. This time, despite beer and pizza provided, and being amongst the worst dressed in the room, things went much better for me. Of course my team-mate Melissa spoke well, but surprisingly I didn’t stumble half as much as I first had. We lost again, but it was ‘very close’. It must have been enthralling for the Dean, because at the end I overheard him express his desire for a beer, lest he go ‘ga ga’. Surely, that is the mark of a passable attempt, worthy of any lecturer in Jurisprudence. We should have released our addition to the Cavendish ‘Essential series’ then and there.

Mooting from my perspective is difficult, particularly for first year students, and therefore may not be for everyone. Having said this, I must come to my conclusion and agree with MULS: if you don’t do it, you’ll regret it. Besides those reasons already given, mooting like many team activities, is a great way to meet new people, an adrenaline rush, and I’m banking on it: very satisfying in the event one’s team wins (although advancement by forfeit isn’t bad either). At the end of the day, I would do it again: so take my advice and participate in junior mooting during your first year. From my experience, it probably won’t increase your level of regret and more importantly I’m three friends up for it: thank you Amy, Melissa and Hamish.

Laws alone can not secure freedom of expression; in order that every man present his views without penalty there must be spirit of tolerance in the entire population.

Albert Einstein
US (German-born) physicist

Even when laws have been pen down, they ought not always to remain unchanged.

Murli Rao (DWT's Management Guru)

It is the spirit and not the form of law that keeps justice alive.

Earl Warren

When men are pure, laws are useless; when men are corrupt, laws are broken.

Benjamin Disraeli

Put yourself in the picture

Gilbert + Tobin has achieved a lot in its first 20 years, growing to a team of 400 and being widely recognised for innovation and excellence. The next 20 years promise to be even better as we continue growing as an elite firm in Australia and expand our work internationally. Talk to us today if you're ready to join a firm on the move.

MAKE IT HAPPEN

To learn more about our people and what we do, please visit our website www.gtlaw.com.au

Macquarie Law Team Wins Commonwealth Moot

Sebastian Hartford-Davis

[contact for further details : Sebastian Hartford-Davis, 0405 202 196, shhartforddavis@gmail.com; Margaret Kelly 0405 642 246, margaret.kelly@mq.edu.au]

The Australian mooting team from Macquarie Law School has won the Commonwealth Moot.

After defeating all comers from 31 law schools at the June 2007 Australian Law Students Association (ALSA) National Mooting Championships in Canberra, the Macquarie team, consisting of Sebastian Hartford-Davis, Tom O'Brien, and Patrick Mahoney, represented Australia at the Commonwealth Moot held in Nairobi Kenya from 9-17 September. Earlier, the team had won the Macquarie competition before a high-profile bench, consisting of Mr Justice William Gummow (High Court of Australia), Mr Bret Walker SC (NSW Bar), Professor Tony Blackshield (Emeritus Professor, Macquarie University), Mr Aaron Cornish (former Macquarie Mooter) and Ms Carly Parrot (Minter Ellison). The moot problem, written by Dr Margaret Kelly of Macquarie Law, was a constitutional challenge to a fictional Commonwealth Act assuming control of water allocations in the Murray-Darling Basin.

The Commonwealth Moot was held in conjunction with the Commonwealth Law Conference 2007, and is a biannual competition with competitors representing their regions—South Pacific, New Zealand, Australia, South East Asia (India, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh and Pakistan), Caribbean, South Africa, East Africa, West Africa, Canada and the United Kingdom. The moot problem involved a highly complicated hypothetical trade dispute between three fictional African countries.

After defeating Bangladesh, Kenya and Jamaica in the preliminary rounds, the team met South Africa in the final. Justice Michael Kirby of Australia's High Court had been scheduled to judge the final, but disqualified himself as he was of the same nationality as one of the competing teams.

The final moot was conducted in the impressive Kenyan High Court before a highly interventionist and brilliant bench, chaired by Lady Justice Mary Arden of the UK Court of Appeal, as well as Madame Justice Kentish from Barbados, and a Judge of the Kenyan High Court.

After a very hard-fought contest, with at times almost vitriolic exchanges between opposing Counsel, Australia was awarded winners and Sebastian Hartford-Davis was awarded best advocate in the grand-final. The team brought home the Commonwealth Mooting Trophy to decorate the already overloaded Macquarie Law cabinet for the third time in the history of the competition, which was founded in 1983. The team received support from the NSW Law Society, Piper Alderman Lawyers in Sydney, the Crown Solicitor's Office NSW, and Macquarie Law.

Vis Moot 2008: Macquarie's International Mooting Success

Megan Valsinger-Clark

From 13 to 20 March 2008 the University of Vienna hosted the 15th annual Willem C Vis International Commercial Arbitration Moot, which attracted over 1400 law students and over 600 practitioners and academics from all over the world. Applications from Macquarie law students for this year's team were numerous, with Rowan Platt, Ishwar Singh, Shaun Star and Sam Sykes finally being selected for participation in the Moot and enrolment in the LAW535 Willem C Vis International Commercial Arbitration Moot elective.

About the Moot

The 15th Vis Moot problem involved a dispute in relation to a contract for the international sale of wine, governed by the UN Convention on the International Sale of Goods. The dispute had been referred to arbitration conducted in accordance with a set of American international arbitration rules, the JAMS Rules. Teams competing in the Moot were required to prepare written and oral submissions on the purchaser's application for a stay of arbitration proceedings pending the resolution of parallel court proceedings, failing which the purchaser sought a ruling that the wine was not fit for the particular purpose made known to the seller. This year's Moot was the largest to date, with 203 universities entering teams in the competition, including the University of Co-logne, the University of Bonn, the Sorbonne, the London School of Economics, Berkeley, Columbia University, Georgetown University, Harvard University and New York University.

The Australian presence at this year's Moot was, as always, substantial. Deakin University, Griffith University, Macquarie University, Monash University, Murdoch University, UNSW, UTS and Victoria University, Melbourne entered team's in this year's competition. Australia's strong reputation at the Vis Moot was validated when 6 of the 8 Australian teams engaged in the competition were selected for the elimination rounds.

Macquarie's Success

After great success in the first four rounds of the Moot, Macquarie was one of the Australian teams selected to compete in the elimination rounds. Macquarie defeated an excellent team from Rijeka University (Croatia) in the first elimination round on 18 March 2008. The following morning, Macquarie was very narrowly defeated in the second elimination round by a team from Osgoode Hall (Canada), a university with a very strong reputation after winning the 11th Vis Moot in 2004. Though difficult, Macquarie improved upon its success when Ishwar Singh received an award of Honourable Mention for Best Speaker at the Awards Banquet on 20 March 2008.

This year's team upheld Macquarie's excellent reputation at the Vis Moot, being one of the very few universities that has been selected to compete in the elimination rounds every year in which it has entered a team.

The problem for next year's Moot will be released on 3 October 2008, with oral hearings held in Vienna from 3-9 April 2009. In the event that Macquarie decides to compete in next year's Moot, information in relation to applications will be made available on the MULS website prior to the release of the problem.

Out of Law's Reach

A Rant on Road Rage

WARNING: If you are easily offended by gross generalisations or political incorrectness, do not read this article. Disclaimer: This article is not meant to be offensive, merely a bit of fun, please do not read if you are easily offended.

There is a range of State and Commonwealth legislation that regulate the roads we use. From licensing to road rules and penalties, many road related deaths have undoubtedly been prevented. For speeders there are speed traps, for drink drivers there are mobile RBTs and there are even cameras for those who use bus lanes. On the odd occasion there may even be an opportunity for vigilante justice, such as the 'Dob in a Tosser' or 'Report a Smokey Vehicle' Programs run through the EPA.

Given that Australia is so 'regulation-happy', there is an obvious gap in the regulation of our roads...that's right, I'm talking about the incompetent, the totally oblivious and the downright arrogant drivers that plague our roads, make our blood boil and escape any kind of 'justice' whatsoever. Here is a list of the Top 4 drivers that in small and big ways make the road a more dangerous and stressful place to be and which should all be forced to place an appropriate warning on their car, such as "Beware: I don't pay attention to road signs therefore I need to change lanes at the last possible moment":

1. Female Drivers

The most erratic of all drivers. At both extremes aggressive (I have a small fast car, I'm young and I'm independent so get out of my way) or timid (I have my indicator

MALLESONS STEPHEN JAUQUES

Take your career to the top

Mallesons Stephen Jaques is synonymous with legal excellence. So if you join our team, you're on track for a great legal career.

From an early stage our lawyers have responsibility, autonomy and client contact.

You will have the opportunity to be involved in cutting-edge legal work, learn from experts who are at the top of their game and work in a fast-moving environment with top-end technology.

Our comprehensive mentoring, training and career development programs are also among the best in the marketplace.

And with international offices, there are opportunities to work for Mallesons overseas.

So when you're thinking about a challenging and rewarding role, think about us.

Mergers & acquisitions

Banking & financial services

Property, construction & environment

Competition

Dispute resolution

Taxation

Intellectual property & technology

To find out about vacation and graduate positions, visit:

www.mallesons.com/careers

CFO Magazine
Corporate Legal Services Firm of the Year 2007

Sydney Melbourne Perth Brisbane Canberra Hong Kong Beijing Shanghai London

www.mallesons.com/careers

on, that means you have to let me in, but I'm not going to attempt to change lanes until you leave a 15m gap for me). Female drivers also take focusing on the road and their surroundings the least seriously (reading books, talking on their mobile phone, doing their make up, reading a street directory, fiddling with the radio etc.) For some strange reason, many female drivers also struggle with parking, preferring the 'nose-in' approach or the 'nudge-parking' approach. Don't even get me started on mothers who park in 'No-Parking Zones' in their 4WDs to pick up little Johnny from school.

2. Older Drivers

This is the only category where the very real dangers these drivers present are actually being dealt with in the legislative process. Drivers over the age of 80 have to be retested every year and some elderly drivers are restricted to their local areas. But are these measures enough? How many times have you been stuck behind a driver wearing a bowling hat driving at 20kmph under the speed limit in the right hand lane because that driver wants to turn right in 1km? Or behind an older driver that makes sudden changes in direction or speed? Or worse, an older driver in peak hour traffic who is panicking about firstly being in peak-hour traffic and secondly about not knowing where they are really going?

3. Taxi/Bus Drivers

Clearly if you drive for a living you have the right to invent your own road rules.

4. Drivers in Car Parks

For some inexplicable reason, drivers lose all manners and common sense when they enter a car park. Drivers stalk people walking back to their car, while validate their ticket before getting to the exit and then argue about it through the intercom holding up a line of cars.

These are but a few categories of drivers and driving habits that make everyday driving for others stressful and dangerous, but yet for which we have no recourse to the law. Whether further regulation on the roads would be good or bad, it would be nice to think that people could use the same common sense and courtesy when in their cars as they do face-to-face. Where is the justice?

Jeanette Thomson

a long line of cars wait behind; drivers travel in the wrong direction through the car park; drivers don't pull far enough across while waiting for a car park to allow cars behind to move on, or drivers behind don't pull through when there is clearly enough space to do so; drivers do everything other than turn on the ignition and pull out of the space when they get back to their car (they rummage through their handbag, play with the radio, make phone calls); drivers who are lazy and arrogant park in disabled spots despite clearly not being disabled; drivers who don't

GOING INTERNATIONAL

Polina Oussova

Every year 20 or so Macquarie law students, ranging from second years to fifth years with an odd psych student thrown in for good measure, head off to the University of Vienna to take part in a short term exchange program focusing on international law.

The original program was scheduled to run over 6 weeks, however upon our arrival we were intrigued/dismayed/concerned/suprised to discover that it had been condensed into a mere two and a half weeks. This meant that classes were run six days a week and covered the four topics of: International Institutions, Fichte's legal philosophy, legal culture of eastern europe and human rights law. Whilst the program was unexpectedly challenging at times: 5 hour philosophy tutorials without breaks on Saturday mornings, impossible to find exam rooms, 8am starts and lack of textbooks it also had many benefits. These included genuinely interesting content, engaging and experienced professors, international classmates, open book exams and a cafeteria that believed in subsidising wine for students.

Upon arrival we first and foremost busied ourselves with complaining about the cold, 5 degrees, but were soon quietened by the fact that the previous year temperatures had fallen to minus 15. The universities both recommended that all the students stay in the one hostel, which proved to be great advice because everyone got along so well and being in the one place facilitated the organisation of assignments, presentations, post-program travel planning, random one night clubbing trips to Bratislava and various debates pertaining to logistical matters like how many cases of beer could legitimately be smuggled into the hostel, and whether or not a diet of bratwurst and sacher torte was feasible.

Although the university doesn't organise specific social activities for short term exchange students, being in Vienna there is no shortage of things to do. These ranged from numerous group schnitzel devouring dinners, 3 euro evenings at the opera and ballet, clubbing in what can only be referred to as demountable posing as a building, commemorative tattoos, ordering meters of schnapps, regretting said orders, drinking our body weight in beer, visits to art galleries and museums and raiding H&M again, and again, and again for elusive 5 euro gloves and 15 euro jackets.

The program was both intellectually and socially stimulating, and I would encourage everyone to go. It is worth 4 credit points towards your degree and a hefty scholarship is provided by Macquarie University for all students that are accepted into it. It is guaranteed that everyone will come back with numerous new friends, and plenty of hilarious, bizarre and interesting stories about their exchange experience.

For more information go to www.international.mq.edu.au which will have more specific details relating to the 2009 program.

One office, one sense of purpose, a wealth of opportunities.

Summer Clerkships 2008

If you are looking to move quickly in your career and gain up-front hands on experience, then Henry Davis York is the place to start.

We are a progressive firm with a distinguished track record, an impressive client list, and a passion and pride in who we are and what we do that defines our culture.

You'll experience a range of practice areas during your clerkship and benefit from one-to-one training.

You'll be treated like an individual, you'll get interesting and challenging work to do and you'll have a great time doing it.

If we sound like the kind of firm you'd like to start your career with, visit us at www.hdy.com.au.

For more information, contact our Human Resources Manager, Debbie Avery on +61 2 9947 6432
or debbie_avery@hdy.com.au

HENRY DAVIS YORK
LAWYERS

15, 18 August

Second-hand Textbook Sale

Avoid the long lines and excessive prices, or just make a return on some old textbooks.

- Hand in your old books weeks 1 and 2.
- Sale occurs August 15 and 18.

15 August

Competitions Registration Closes

Whether you got into law to embarrass experts in the witness box or happen to pull HD's from nowhere, there's plenty on offer with witness examination, negotiation, and paper presentation.

September

Commemorative Dinner

The first since 2006, this night promises to be one to satisfy the intellectual taste buds. Details and date to follow soon.

4-12 September

Law Revue

Following sell-out shows in 2007, Law Revue 2008 promises to be a no-holds barred, gut busting, rollercoaster ride of thrills, spills, laughs, tears and nudity.

14 October

Careers Workshop

Focused on providing students with information about the various avenues which a law degree can take you. Features speakers from law firms, the bar, financial companies, government and academia.

6 November

Law Ball

The pre-eminent social event of 2008.
Details to follow soon.

TBA

Intervarsity Sports Day & Party

A crazy two events not to be missed whether you're a sports freak or just happen to enjoy drinking to excess with Sydney's craziest law students.

www.muls.org

The Final Thought

The first semester has been a whirl wind of competitions, socials, law camps, studying, doing 'all-nighters', and pressure induced bawling. It has however, all been worth it and as we reach its conclusion, we see the light at the end of the tunnel that is the 'holidays', and sigh with relief.

Next semester we should expect great competitions in Witness Examination and Negotiations, as we have seen in Mooting and Client Interview first semester. Law Revue is also on its way, and is sure to provide hours of entertainment for everyone involved and all those going to watch its antics.

We ALL excitedly await glorious Law Ball.

We hope you have enjoyed all the articles written by you fellow law students, and all the frolicking in the photos of the socials.

Here at The Brief we aim to entertain and if you feel you can contribute an interesting article about current events, or you would like to participate in any aspect of it, please feel free to contact me at thebrief@mul.s.org.

See you all second semester for Issue 2 of The Brief 2008!!!

Amy Malaquin

Allens Arthur Robinson

Blake Dawson

MALLESONS STEPHEN JAKES

CLAYTON UTZ

GILBERT
TOBIN

LAWYERS

CORRS
CHAMBERS
WESTGARTH
lawyers

BAKER & MCKENZIE

Freehills

HENRY DAVIS YORK
LAWYERS

MinterEllison
LAWYERS

We thank you our Sponsors, as their great support has made this issue
possible and successful.